Yale University
The Rose Center
New Haven, CT

As the first project in an important new campus sector linking Central Campus and Science Hill, this building acts as a beacon for the University and the New Haven Community that places manned police functions at the ground floor to provide 24 hour “eyes on the street.” Uninterrupted glass walls at the public edges of the building reinforce the department’s commitment to community policing. The project also includes a community center for gathering and education. Opened in 2006. (38,000 s.f.)
